INTERIOR PORTFOLIO

This portfolio presents my Interior Design Studio project developed during the fifth semester of architectural studies. The project focuses on redesigning a residential floor plan and proposing a detailed interior solution for a selected room.

Design Process

Step 01

The project began with studying the existing house plan and understanding the spatial layout of the selected room. Circulation, natural lighting, and functional requirements were analyzed to identify opportunities for improvement.

Step 02

After analyzing the space, a design concept was developed focusing on creating a warm and comfortable living environment. The concept explored the use of natural materials, wooden elements, and soft lighting to enhance the spatial experience.

Step 03

The concept was translated into a detailed interior proposal through digital modeling and spatial refinement. Furniture placement, wall treatments, lighting, and ceiling design were carefully developed to create a cohesive interior space.

Plan Development

The proposed design reinterprets the existing residential layout by refining circulation, spatial hierarchy, and interior functionality. Adjustments in furniture placement and zoning help create a more balanced and efficient environment while establishing the living area as the primary focal space of the house.

TV Wall Transformation

Existing Condition

Proposed Design

The existing wall was simple and lacked visual focus within the living space. The television was mounted directly on the wall without any integrated design elements, resulting in a space that felt incomplete and visually unbalanced.

The proposed design introduces a feature TV wall that becomes the focal point of the room. Wooden paneling, a textured backdrop, and integrated storage create a more structured composition. Warm lighting and natural materials were incorporated to enhance the atmosphere and provide a cohesive relationship with the overall interior concept.

Sofa Wall Transformation

Existing Condition

Proposed Design

The original wall lacked a strong visual identity and did not function as a focal element within the living area. The redesign introduces a central decorative feature supported by vertical wooden panels, warm ambient lighting, and textured wall finishes. These elements create depth and balance while establishing a calm and inviting atmosphere that aligns with the overall interior concept of the space.

Door Wall Transformation

Existing Condition

Proposed Design

The existing doorway and surrounding wall surfaces appeared visually disconnected from the rest of the interior and lacked a cohesive design treatment. The proposed intervention integrates the wall into the overall design through vertical wooden elements, soft lighting, and full-height curtains. This approach enhances visual continuity while adding warmth and refinement to the space.

Window Wall Transformation

Existing Condition

Proposed Design

The original window area used heavy curtains and minimal design elements, which limited natural light and reduced the overall spatial quality. The redesigned window wall introduces lighter fabrics, a display cabinet, and natural materials to create a brighter and more balanced environment. These additions improve functionality while maintaining the warm and cohesive character of the interior.

Final Reflection

Through this interior design project, I gained valuable experience in analyzing an existing residential space and developing a design proposal that enhances both functionality and aesthetics. The process involved understanding spatial relationships, material selection, lighting design, and visual composition. Working on my own house plan allowed me to critically evaluate real-life constraints and design practical solutions. This project strengthened my ability to communicate design ideas through drawings, renders, and presentation layouts.

Thank You
